Stono Ferry History

Monument Row

The Links at Stono Ferry is a unique and history rich golf experience. As you play your round you will find monuments on the 12th, 13th and 14th holes inscribed with descriptions of the plantation's history.

The Battle of Stono Ferry was fought on these grounds June 20, 1779. A part of the battlefield still exists on the 12th hole. Located to the right of the fairway is a redoubt, which was a site used as a fortification. This battle between American Patriots and the British Army resulted in hundreds of casualties. One of the Americans killed in the battle was Hugh Jackson, older brother of President Andrew Jackson.

The Charleston and Savannah Railroad traveled the same causeway currently used as the cart path on the 13th hole.

Established in the 1850's, this rail line served as the main lifeline between these southern cities, until it was abandoned in the 1960's.

The land surrounding the 14th tee was base for the "Stono Ferry Crossing". This area was also the site of a fortification that was used during the American Revolution and the Civil War. The crossing later served area plantations in transport-
